abstract rather than attempt to offer a definition of modern chinese literature or provide a comprehensive survey of all that the category might entail this volume instead uses a series of strategic interventions to illustrate the structural conditions out of which modern chinese literature has emerged how it is viewed and how it may be interpreted our goal in other words is to showcase a set of methodologies that one may use to approach modern chinese literature while in the process offering different ways of reassessing what modern chinese literature is in the first place we contend that modern chinese literature is not a static category but rather it is a dynamic entity whose significance and limits are continually being reshaped through the process of interpretation itself similarly modern chinese literature is not a singular unitary category but rather a plurality of overlapping categories of modern chinese literatures divided into three parts on structure taxonomy and methodology this volume contains 46 original articles that examine unfamiliar texts and literary phenomena and offer new perspectives on more familiar ones
